5 ways to counter insider threats

CIPS

A lot of attention is being paid to hackers who have broken into high-profile companies in the past 12 months, but CSOs shouldn't forget that insiders are a big threat. What to do about them is the other source of worry of chief security officers. Having managers well-trained by HR on ways to avoid creating disgruntled employees is one tactic, but sometimes a staffer can't be mollified.

Experts: Tech trends, oil price slump could boost cloud adoption

IT World Canada

Technology expenditure cuts brought about by declining oil prices, coupled with a few tech trends highlighted in the recently conclude Consumer Electronics Shows could bring about a rise in overall cloud adoption. For example in Canada, many companies, particularly those located in the energy patch, are expected to dial down on new project spending. However, at least one IT industry analyst believes this could bring about a renewed focus on cloud computing.

CIPS

The Internet of Things (IoT) is colossal, and growing. According to a January 2014 research report from Raymond James & Associates, today 80 "things" — including consumer electronics, machine tools, industrial equipment, cars, and appliances — connect to the Internet for the first time every second. By 2020 this will expand to 250 new devices every second.
