CIPS NS Halifax March 29 Event: 'Leading Attitudinal Change — The Personal Approach'

CIPS

Why didn't the programmers at VW say no when they were asked to circumvent the law? Why do even your honest employees sometimes seem content with inadequate or non-compliant work? How do you ensure that your people are taking proper personal responsibility for their work, so you don't have to clean up their mess? READ MORE

Android phones at risk from another Stagefright exploit

IT World Canada

Frustration by CISOs with the security of the Android ecosystem continues to increase. The latest reason comes from NorthBit, an Israeli security firm, which said in a report this week it has created a new proof of concept exploit of a bug in Android's multimedia library that will defeat even recently-issued patches. READ MORE

The IT skills shortage — fact or myth?

ITBusiness.ca

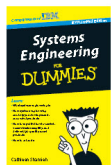

For some years now, I have been seeing a reasonably large number of articles about the "impending skills shortage" in IT. Based partly on my own recent experience and also on that of numerous IT practitioners I have interacted with in recent months, I have come to several startling conclusions, and this blog is intended to acquaint its' readers with them and hopefully spark some discussion about this subject. READ MORE
