IT professional careers: is being a generalist a dead end option?

IT World Canada

Recently, I have been involved in several discussions with IT pros who were seeking employment and a common theme appeared to come up in most of the discussions. Everyone wanted to know if there was any future in becoming an IT generalist, rather than specializing in a single track. In some cases this came about because they were having a difficult time finding a position in their particular specialization. In others, their old specialization was no longer in demand, and usually, this was because the product the specialization was based on either no longer existed, or had been supplanted by a better product that did the same thing — only better!
