Consumerism, mass extinction and our throw-away society

CIPS via Electronic Recycling Association

We've got kind of a problem here. On the right side of the pendulum, consumerism has reached an all-time high, with products reaching their planned obsolescence within absurdly short timespans and new products being rolled out (and bought) by the millions every day. And, since every action has an equal and opposite reaction, we have to expect consequences.

8 things CISOs should do if their enterprise is hacked

IT World Canada

There's nothing that will make a CISO's blood run cold more than being told by staff the organization has been hacked. At that moment, however, the eyes of the entire enterprise are now aimed at at him or her.

Microsoft shares insights at United Nations

Canadian IT Manager's Blog

Carolyn Nguyen, Microsoft Director Telecom and Internet Governance, provided compelling insights in support of the World Summit on the Information Society (WSIS) action lines and Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) at the United Nations recently. She gave several examples where Microsoft was bridging the digital divide, supporting capacity building through education, implementing youth and diversity engagement. READ MORE

The IoT is pulling IT and engineering skills together in a highly-sought after combination

IT World Canada

A shortage of IT skills in large enterprises is an age-old lament; the Internet of Things (IoT) is giving it a new twist. Not only are large organizations looking for IT talent to help them capitalize on IoT, but they are looking for candidates who have an engineering background that might encompass manufactured products and hardware firmware, according to Daniel Masata, senior VP of Adecco Engineering & Technology, a staffing and services recruitment firm. Invitation to serve as a speaker during July UN General Assembly

Canadian IT Manager's Blog

As Chair Global Industry Council and Vice-Chair of IFIP's International Professional Practice Partnership (IP3), I received this invitation (excerpts quoted below) to speak recently, from the UNITED NATIONS. Thursday was an historical unprecedented UNITED NATIONS event — the first time external non-governmental stakeholder were given this extended ability to inform the United Nations through three panels (speakers are assigned as speakers or respondents) and unique with live streaming and Twitter for questions. Featured Whitepaper: 'Measuring the Business Value of Converged Systems'

CIPS via IT World Canada

Today's businesses are demanding that their datacenter operators reliably deliver large and highly variable amounts of transactions, content serving, and analytics on time, with no delays and no excuses. In this new agile universe, IT assets can no longer be deployed and managed in a fragmented fashion. READ MORE

Journal: NYC, Pennsylvania, Geneva, Brussels - CIO CITY, Amsterdam, Paris

CIPS

I have spent the last several weeks between Vancouver and cities in the U.S. and the European Union including: LA, New York, Pennsylvania, Geneva, Brussels, Amsterdam, Paris. I have a lot to share from my experiences and insights. I provided several posts on the ITU WSIS here in IT Manager and will soon share lessons from the CIO CITY Summit where I chaired the session with the winners of the EU CIOs of the year. READ MORE
