August CIPS Volunteer of the Month: Dale McInnis, I.S.P., ITCP

CIPS

I joined CIPS in 2000 in an effort to expand my knowledge of the IT industry as well as associate with other professionals in IT. I have attended several CIPS Toronto sections over the years and have always been impressed with both the topic as well as the speakers. More recently I was involved with the review of the Bill C-13 (Protecting Canadians from Online Crime Act) draft which re-enforced the importance of CIPS representing IT professionals with the Canadian Government.

Why organizations will run to the cloud, not from it

IT World Canada

When attending the Gigaom Structure conference in San Francisco this summer, two things stood out for me: one was how few organizations are actually running loads in the cloud today. The second was the huge amount of work, both legislatively and technically that cloud providers were doing in order to resolve concerns companies have around data sovereignty, security and privacy.

Using network virtualization to increase security

IT World Canada

After server and desktop virtualization, network virtualization is the next area of the data centre to adopt the technology. It isn't going easy in enterprises, though, in part because the parts aren't completely there yet. However, it may get a boost if another, less obvious reason for adopting network virtualization emerges: improved security.
