Should kids have the power to 'buy it now'?

IT World Canada

I was watching a rerun of Dragon's Den when I heard a young boy make the case for a feature that many web brands are now rolling out — a "buy it now" button. It was intended for kids to order what they saw on the TV using the TV remote. Even with the prevarication that the child would have a limited budget versus a wide open credit card, this just seemed wrong to me. I was very glad when the dragons did not buy into it — Kevin O'Leary turned it down with enthusiasm. READ MORE

Featured Whitepaper: 'The ABCs of continuous release and deploy in a DevOps approach'

CIPS

Agile practices have enabled development teams to quickly create change but too often the ability of operations to safely deploy every release to production is hindered with manual processes and poor communications. The result? A backlog in application deployment and organizational failure to keep up with business needs, market trends, and customer demands. READ MORE

October CIPS Volunteer of the Month: Lucien Peron I.S.P., ITCP

CIPS

What value has your involvement with CIPS provided? We should not lose sight on the fact that CIPS holds the only certification for the IT profession as a whole that is recognized by law by the government of Canada. And that only CIPS in Canada and ACS in Australia — out of approximately 60 other associations — are accredited by IFIP. We should be proud of that fact. READ MORE
