Should businesses respond to terrorism threat levels?

IT World Canada

After the shootings on Parliament Hill businesses may consider if they have a role protecting information in our country. When the terrorism threat level is higher, perhaps there are databases that need to be locked down?

Beware of the virtual extreme

IT World Canada

Virtual interaction takes travel time and cost almost completely out of the picture. The bottom line impact of this combination is a hard lure to resist, particularly for companies with multiple locations. It is efficient for sure. But what about the impact on effectiveness?
